THURSDAY MORNING

Honolulu—J. F. C. Hagens writing to the Advertiser, from the coast, says that Palmer is satisfied he misunderstood the state of the previous reorganization of Hackfelds. He now shows confidence in the reorganizers by selecting the same five Americans as directors. The present arrangement is temporary but the way is open for the same men to acquire stock as under previous arrangement. He suggests the possibility of a coalition cabinet in Washington and also suggests that in view of the Democratic confusion in Hawaii, that if the Republicans get together and support one man, they stand a good chance to land him.

Gooding Field received order to waive weight and height requirements in the draft and to leave the acceptance of the draftees to the discretion of the draft officials.

CAPTAIN ELBO SAYS HE IS GERMAN

San Francisco—Captain Elbo, testifying at the Hindu trial, declares, "I am German, not American, and will do everything in my power and employ every fair means to aid my country." He denied that German masters were instructed to destroy their ships when American seizure threatened. Captain Deinart admitted having delivered sailing instructions to the Maverick but declared he did not know that the German consul at Honolulu was interested.

AT THE THEATERS

Billie Burke in

"Arms and the Girl"

"Arms and the Girl", the Paramount picture starring wee winsome Billie Burke, follows rather closely the stage version of a few years ago which met with unprecedented success on Broadway. Briefly, the plot is as follows: An American girl, Ruth Sherwood, is stranded in Belgium at the opening of the present war, without money or friends, and innocently exchanges passports with a Russian girl—a spy.

Another young American, Wilfred Ferrers, also helps the Russian girl by the loan of his automobile. When the Germans seize the town, the young man is arrested and sentenced to be shot for helping a spy. "The Girl," however, saves him by declaring him to be her fiancé, for whom she has been waiting.

As if doubtful of this and wishing to prove the truth of her statement, the German general orders them to be married at once and the two young people find themselves in a most embarrassing and somewhat amusing position.

The husband escapes, however, while in the meantime the real fiancé appears and, on learning of the situation, proves himself to be something of a coward and a cad. Ruth, discovering that she does not love him, is overjoyed with Wilfred, now her husband, is saved, and the two resolve not to annul the ceremony which had brought them together.

Miss Burke is at her best in this production, which was directed by Joseph Kaufman, one of the most celebrated directors of filmdom, and in which the cast is extremely well chosen, including two members of the original stage version, George S. Trimble and Malcolm Dunn, at the Wailuku Orpheum next Saturday.

"The Narrow Trail"

Never on the screen, stage or canvas has there been recorded a Western character of such powerful appeal as the portrait of Ice Harding, a typical "bad man" of the plains, painted by William S. Hart in his newest photoplay, "The Narrow Trail." Popular "Bill" Hart has presented many stirring portrayals depicting famous types of the great West in its palmy days, but in his latest picture he easily outshines even his own splendid picturizations of the past which have resulted in making him one of the very foremost actors in the hearts of the motion picture public.

Ice Harding is a typical bandit, an outlaw whose daring has made him the terror of several states. Yet despite his black record he is a man with a human side, a bandit who knows no fear but a man who stands by his friends until they prove themselves unworthy, a gentleman at all times as far as the ladies are concerned and a horseman whose pony considers him its best pal in the world. Into the life of this outlaw comes a beautiful girl, his ideal of all that is good and pure. After the greatest fight he has ever experienced—a battle with himself—he gives up his following and hunts up the girl to start life anew. Suddenly, his ideals strangled through a horrible revelation, he believes himself misled and his new faith in the good side of life is shattered. Through the scenes which depict these evolutions in the career of this man of the prairie William S. Hart travels with a realism that will mark him as a much greater actor than even his many thousands of ardent admirers proclaim him to be. Whether it be in the fierce hand-to-hand encounter in which he is attacked by two toughs; in the thrilling horse race in which he outdistances all his opponents while thousands in the grandstand gasp in amazement at the unheralded entry and the sheriff awaits him at the end of the race, or whether he appears in a scene with his beloved horse which plays upon the heart strings, "Bill" Hart drives home the force of the scene as only he can. Undoubtedly his greatest characterization, the success of William S. Hart's first Art-craft picture produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince is primarily due to one cause—"Big Bill" himself is the author of the story. No one knows William S. Hart's best capabilities better than the beloved actor himself. It marks his debut as an author and scores a double triumph for him as a result, at the Wailuku Orpheum next Wednesday.

Starts Revolution When Girl Is Forcibly Held by foe

The most realistic revolution ever fought out on screens is one of the dramatic scenes in "Soldiers of Chance," the Greater Vitaphone Blue Ribbon Feature, now appearing in the Wailuku theater for next Sunday. There are soldiers galore and a real palace about which the battle rages until the federal troops are driven off under big gun and rifle fire. This is a picture of two strong men fighting for a wealthy young woman of highest character who is led to believe her father is a murderer. As the struggle, which begins in a counting room in New York, is carried across the Atlantic in a private yacht to its conclusion in the interior of South America.

Albert E. Smith, president of Greater Vitaphone presents a cast as strong as the play, being headed by Evert Overton and Miriam Fouché and including Charles Kent, Charles Henderson and Denton Vane.

Charley Chaplin in "Behind the Screen"

In his new picture which bears the title, "Behind the Screen," Chaplin is the central figure of interest in a series of extraordinary happenings that occur in a moving picture establishment. In this production Chaplin and a fair fellow worker in overalls and jumper match wits with the bully of the organization and, as usual with Chaplin pictures, the laugh are there, at the Wailuku Orpheum next Friday.

Bessie Love and Triangle Kiddies in "Cheerful Givers"

Bessie Love, assisted by the Triangle kiddies, will entertain with "Cheerful Givers," a Triangle picture, at Wailuku Orpheum.

Orphans are always interesting and appealing, and when they are pretty as Bessie Love and as clever as the Triangle kiddies they are an irresistible attraction.

Bessie is Debby, the daughter of Parson Deady, who is superintendent of a bankrupt orphanage. When Mrs. Grey, a wealthy society woman, catches her handsome son, Kenneth Harlan, flirting with "the kitchen vampire" she discharges that dimpled maid and sends to the orphanage for "the oldest boy," whom she intends to employ in the kitchen instead of a girl. But there is no "oldest boy" at the orphanage, so Bessie, to help out during the pecuniary stress, puts on a curly wig, boy's clothes and takes the position. She deceives Mrs. Grey, but not the son.

Humor and human interest fill the play. One of the most delightful situations occurs when a band of tiny orphans comes trooping to the Grey home one night on a rescuing expedition for their "little mother," Bessie. But they are so tired upon reaching their destination that, instead of rescuing her, she is forced to rescue them and tuck them in bed. Later they take an important part in bringing about the climax of the play.—Adv.
